PREFACE.

Amongst the most unhappy of mortals, according to Dr Johnson, are the writers of Dictionaries, "whom mankind," he observes, "have considered, not as the pupils, but the slaves of science, the pioneers of literature, doomed only to remove rubbish and clear obstructions from the paths through which learning and genius press forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress. Every other author may aspire to praise, the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach, and even this negative recompense has been yet granted to very few."

A century has elapsed since the learned doctor penned this warning; yet, luckily for the cause of science and literature, the ranks of the "humble drudge" have not, in the meantime, become thinned by the tone of discouragement in which it is written, but, on the contrary, the number of "pioneers" has been multiplied a hundredfold.

Of works on Biography the number is legion; nevertheless, it appeared to the compiler of the present volume that room still existed for a Compendium, in which, by a judicious system of compression, a Students' Dictionary might be formed, which would register what, after all, is of the first importance to them,—viz., the more prominent dates and facts,—and at the same time assist them to the knowledge of works of a more recondite nature, in which fuller information might be found, if needed.

Such a Compendium is now before the reader. An approximation to the system adopted has been attempted by others, but in no case has it been carried out to the extent of the present work; neither has the system of reference—the principal feature of this design—ever been essayed, if thought of.

The want which the present work is intended to supply is one which must have been experienced by every earnest reader or writer. The value of the data upon which the generalisations of both must rest mainly depends upon the readiness with which they can be verified, and no facts are more frequently in requisition for this purpose than those connected with the personal history of individuals; and when these are not of such note as to have taken their place in general history, it will be evident to all that much valuable time is frequently wasted in the attempt to identify them.

The application of these remarks will be fully understood by all whose literary tastes or duties have led them to the amplification or collation of historical events of minor importance, which have been but briefly or imperfectly described: further insistance, therefore, upon the importance of biographical references would be superfluous. In the form of a dictionary, the arrangement is sufficiently simple to explain itself, and a glance at the list of works consulted will serve to show the variety and character of the sources from which the greater part of the information has been derived, and how far the work goes to supply the vacuum above indicated.

The list of the authorities principally, but by no means exclusively consulted and referred to, gives a fair view of the bibliography of our subject; and the statement that such voluminous publications as Ersch & Gruber's Encyclopædia, of about 150 quarto volumes (see G), the new General Biographical Dictionary, by H. J. Rose, twelve volumes (see R), the Nouvelle Biographie Universelle, published by Didot Frères, in forty-six volumes (see D), have not only been exhausted, but that this work contains nearly four times the number of names in the last mentioned, which is brought down to 1866, and is therefore one of the most recent, will give some idea of the care and labour bestowed upon it.

In these pages, in addition to the matter usually given in Biographical Dictionaries, will be found the names of the Bishops, Chancellors, Judges, and other ecclesiastical and legal functionaries of the United Kingdom, the Lords-Lieutenant of Ireland, great officers of State (with the dates of their accession, and in the case of the bishops, of their translation), classical celebrities, royal and noble personages of all nations, and the greatest number of distinguished Americans ever collected in one work.

The following remarks, to which we invite the reader's attention, will be found essential to the proper use of the book, premising that a complete list of all the works and records consulted during its compilation would of itself form a considerable volume.

The list of authorities facing the letter A, page 1, is referred to by means of letters of the alphabet, placed at the end of nearly every name. It by no means follows, however, that the name of the particular person sought for does not occur in many other works of a similar nature. These references indicate that the works to which they belong contain useful biographies of the persons to whose names they are appended. From this we must except Orridge's "Account of the Citizens of London," and Stubb's "Registrum Sacrum Anglicanum," which latter work has been selected in consequence of the accuracy with which it is compiled, and, furthermore, the advantage of its giving the authorities for the data therein.

The works specified have been selected, after due consideration, as those bearing the highest repute; many of them are probably only to be found in the libraries of the wealthier classes, or upon the shelves of great public libraries; nevertheless, the importance, as well as convenience, of possessing references to all of them, in such a compact and portable form as that here provided, must become at once apparent.

The writers of the notices of highly distinguished and celebrated personages given in biographical dictionaries, encyclopædias, and the like, generally mention the larger works from which the information is taken: in such instances, then, there would probably be no readier mode of ascertaining which were the best works devoted to the records of their career than by following out our references.

Where no reference follows a name, it denotes that the information has been taken from some incidental notice met with during a search in various miscellaneous publications, the mere mention of which would so increase the bulk of our work as to interfere with its handiness and portability. In the case of persons whose career may have marked a period in the history of art or science, but whose lives have been perfectly uneventful, the dates of birth and death are alone given, as being the most probable subjects of inquiry. Since examples of this mode of treatment occur upon every page, we think it proper to explain that they are intentional, and not the result of accidental omission.

Where the accuracy of dates is important, we may, from our own experience, caution the reader that the works of Bryant (B), and of Lanzi (T), however excellent in other respects, are exceedingly fallible, continually differing from Nagler (N), whom we have in preference followed.

We have departed from the common practice of indicating, by asterisks or any other mark, that the person named was living at the time we wrote, having discovered, from the number of deaths occurring whilst the work was in progress, that such distinctions would lead to confusion and misapprehension.

It is very probable that, upon reference to our authorities, discrepancies may in certain instances be discovered between the dates given by them and those which we have adopted. The explanation of this circumstance is, firstly, that whilst we consider the biographies mentioned by us to be among the best, we have adopted the dates from the works of other authors, whenever they have shown themselves to be more trustworthy upon that point. Secondly, the name of one and the same person will sometimes be found in more than one place, owing to the variations of spelling it adopted by different writers, and in order to avoid the loss of time caused by cross-references, we have sometimes inserted the name in alphabetical order, under its various forms. The variations in the dates arise from the same cause as that in spelling—namely, the more or less perfect information of the authors.

Lastly, it may be observed that many names will be found to differ from the forms under which they appear in other dictionaries; for instance, keeping ever in view the compactness of our volume, we have not deemed it necessary to repeat the name of Fabricius under the several forms of Le Favre, Le Fevre, Favre, Fevre, and Faber. We decided to adopt the form most generally accepted, and to leave the rest to the ingenuity of our readers.

The dates assigned to Roman and Greek celebrities must always be received with a certain amount of diffidence and uncertainty as regards their accuracy, since such authorities as Clifton, Blair, Hale, Layard, Smith, and others, commonly differ from each other considerably, and occasionally to a remarkable extent. When we remember the uncertainties which prevail in modern works treating of the lives of comparatively recent distinguished characters, we naturally cannot feel surprised to find them existing as to those of the period before Christ.

It sometimes happens that those who most frequently refer to dates, and are the most sensitive with regard to errors in them, are more than ordinarily careless about ascertaining their accuracy, and very often ignorant as to the means afforded for verifying them. Innumerable difficulties lie in the way of so doing, some of which we will venture to point out, and show what serious obstacles present themselves to the most acute, industrious, and conscientious inquirer.

References made to works of the highest modern authorities, who, from their universally established reputation, command our almost implicit confidence, serve very commonly to perpetuate errors propagated at a very distant period. It is, of course, impossible for a reader to divine what may have been the works consulted by an author when not fully stated; but it may be assumed, as it will generally be proved, that, in the majority of cases, he will have pursued the course of his precursors—namely, by collating the statements of the popular authors of his day, and, on finding them agree, adopting them as final. The data furnished by the latter, when not original, have been derived from similar sources; and it may thus frequently happen, that instead of having before us the concurrent testimony of so many independent investigators, we have only the repetition of the statement of a confident, but careless or ignorant and hurried writer, whilst testimony entitled to superior consideration may have been entirely overlooked or disregarded.

Whilst claiming legitimately the credit of having corrected a vast number of errors of the kind alluded to, we do not for a moment pretend to absolute accuracy; but where this is requisite, we may observe that the perfect knowledge of a difficulty is the grand preliminary to its removal. Amongst so many thousand names, errors will naturally have crept in in despite the strictest supervision. It was, in fact, impossible totally to exclude them. Our endeavour has been, therefore, to indicate the sources whence they arise, and those discrepancies in dates which we have not been enabled to rectify will be found marked with an asterisk. A cursory inspection of Nagler's Künstler-Lexicon, which is considered an exceedingly trustworthy compilation, will show how easily typographical errors may be introduced by careless transcribers or diffident authors. The type selected for this last-named work is peculiar, particularly as regards the figures employed. Persons not gifted with the strongest sight might readily mistake a 6 or a 9 for a 0, so very slight is the difference of shape between them; if we add to this that the ink is faint, the paper bad, and the probability that some of the types became damaged during their service, the occasional inversion of sixes and nines, and the transposition of other figures (as 1775 being rendered 1757 or 1755, 1699 appearing as 1969 or 1996, &c.), together with the palpable fact that the impressions are very frequently defective, we at once become aware of the unavoidable and ever-existing cause of error from the fallibility of printers alone. We do not select Nagler as worthy of special condemnation in this respect, but merely as an example of a modern work which has furnished us with innumerable instances of the difficulties we describe.

Another and frequent cause of such discrepancies is produced by the careless practice of stating, after giving the date of birth of an individual, that he died at the age of so many years, instead of naming the chronological year. This practice, it will be apparent, upon slight reflection, might, in some instances, remove the occurrence from the list of events of the year to which it properly belongs to that of the previous or the subsequent year, and so make the deceased appear either a year younger or older than the date accepted by the modern compiler. In like manner, when we are only informed that an individual died in such a year, aged so many years, in calculating the date of his birth from such loose data, we are always subject to the same possible discrepancy.

Another very serious source of error is that arising from the change of style, and the want of its universal and simultaneous adoption. This may be best understood by giving a short account of the perplexities in dates introduced with this innovation. Trivial as the change appears to be, it will be found upon examination, that so innumerable are the complications arising from this source in chronology and modern history, that without a knowledge of this alteration, and the times at which it was adopted in various countries, it is next to impossible to fix positively the date of any event within one year of the truth.

In the year 1510, Pope Leo X. wrote to Henry VIII. of England pointing out the necessity of making a correction in the Calendar, and requested him to obtain the opinions and advice of eminent scientific men and divines upon the subject, but it was not until Pope Gregory XIII., in the year 1582, pressed the necessity of such alteration that the matter was seriously considered in Europe. This pontiff proposed that ten days should be omitted from the Calendar, or that ten days should be deducted from the year 1582, and that what should have been, according to the then existing style, the 5th of October, should be altered to the 15th. This proposition was accepted, and the alteration adopted upon the day above named, in Spain, Portugal, and part of Italy, including Rome. In France the change took place on the 20th of December 1582, the 10th of that month being called the 20th; in Holland, Brabant, Flanders, Artois, and Hainault, with the exceptions hereafter mentioned, on the 15th of December 1582. Gueldres, Zutphen, the province of Utrecht, Friesland, Gröningen, and Overyssel refused to comply with the requisition, and continued to use the old style 118 years later, until the year 1700, when they adopted the new style, by counting the 1st of December as the 12th. In Lorraine, the 10th of December 1582 was counted as the 20th. In Tuscany, the old style prevailed until 1749 or the early part of 1751.

In Germany, the old style was changed by the Catholics in 1583 or 1584, and retained by the Protestants until 1701, which year was made to commence on the 12th January, old style. In the Cantons of Zurich, Berne, Basle, and Schaffhausen, and in certain towns in other parts of Switzerland, nevertheless, it still remained in use for some time. In Poland, the new style was adopted in 1586; in Hungary, 1587; in Sweden, March 1, 1753; in Denmark, it was adopted in 1582; but from the 20th of December 1699 the Calendar of Weigel, by which the fixing of Easter and the movable feasts of the Protestants are sometimes made to fall upon different days to those of the Catholics, has been used. In Russia, Greece, and wherever the Greek rites prevail, the old style is still religiously preserved.

This important change took place in England so late as the year 1752, by Act of Parliament, when the practice of dating the commencement of the year from the 25th of March was also abolished. The last-mentioned practice is a source of very frequent confusion with historians who have not recognised the importance of using the two dates which are necessary to obviate the otherwise inevitable derangement of the actual succession of events, as by giving a date in February 1307 only, which really means the February of 1308, and, to be perfectly intelligible, must always be written 1307–8. By this Act of Parliament, it was ordained that the next day naturally following the 2nd September 1752 should be reckoned as the 14th day of September; that the day following the said 14th day of September should be reckoned as the 15th, and so on, all succeeding days, in due numerical progression. All public proceedings and acts were ordered henceforth, after the 1st of January 1752, to be dated according to the newly established system. It was also ordained, for the future correction of the Calendar, "that the years of the Christian era, 1800, 1900, 2100, 2200, 2300, or any other like hundredth years (except only every fourth hundredth year), whereof the year 2000 shall be the first, shall be considered common years, consisting of 365 days only, and that the years 2000, 2400, 2800, and every fourth hundred years, from the year 2000 inclusive, and also all other years which are at present considered Bisextile or Leap years, shall, for the future, be reckoned as Bisextile or Leap years of 366 days." These regulations for the correction of the Calendar of the future will naturally in nowise affect dates with which we are concerned, but they are stated here to indicate those changes which, in the efflux of time, by altering the relation of the commencement of the year to its natural determination by the equinoctial periods, will render such corrections necessary.

Another point to be noted in the rectification of miscellaneous dates is the religious persuasions of certain authors in whose works they may occur, which sometimes causes them to differ from those of all other writers. The Jews, until the fifteenth century, reckoned their time from the era of Selucides, three hundred and eleven years and four months before Christ, but, since the close of that century, have dated from the creation of the world, which, according to their computation, took place three thousand seven hundred and sixty years and three months before the commencement of the Christian era. As the ecclesiastical year of the Jews commences six months earlier than the secular year, everything connected with their religious observances is regulated by the former; when, therefore, their ecclesiastical records or calendar is referred to, this circumstance must not be forgotten.

A new era, special to France, which is sufficiently troublesome to students of the history of the tenth decade of the last and the first of the present century, was introduced by a decree of the revolutionary Convention in 1793. By this decree it was ordained that the common era should be no longer used in France in civil affairs, but that a new one should commence from the establishment of the French Republic; that is to say, on 22nd September 1792, the day of the true autumnal equinox, the first year commencing on the midnight of this day, and terminating at midnight between the 21st and 22nd September 1793. Ensuing years were to commence also at midnight of the day upon which the true autumnal equinox should fall, regulations being laid down for the usual intercalation of a day in every fourth year, which was to terminate a period to be called a Franciade, &c. As this arrangement involved an arbitrary redistribution of the months, new names were adopted for them, such as Vindémiaire (the vintage month), Brumaire (the month of fogs), &c.; and, instead of weeks, they were divided into decades of ten days. As this system prevailed only from the 26th November 1792 until the 31st December 1805, it is unnecessary to devote farther space here to an explanation of the mode in which the five complementary days were added and other corrections provided for.

We may remind the reader of some thirty other eras from which events in the history of various, or of the same countries are dated, as the Olympiads, the building of Rome, the ecclesiastical and the civil eras of Constantinople, the Hegira, or the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina, by which the dates of all Mohammedan writers are regulated; the Tyrian and Sidonian, the Julian and Augustan eras; the building of Solomon's Temple, the destruction of Jerusalem, and many others, which will be met with in the course of literary researches. We may also mention the commencement of the Kali Yng, or present era of the Hindoos, commencing 3102 years B.C.; the uncertain Chinese chronologies; and the Sothiac period of the ancient Egyptians, consisting of 1460 years of 365 days and 5 hours, the commencement of which was determined by the heliacal rising of Sothis, Sirius, or the Dog Star, whence it was also called a Canicular period. Since remote events in the history of the three last-named oriental countries have been recognised as of the highest importance in fixing common points of departure in sacred and general history, the necessity of ascertaining exactly the mode of bringing them into correspondence with the dates of the western continent becomes apparent. As all these eras commence at various periods of the year, for the most part selected from no astronomical considerations, frequently for reasons simply special to the people by whom they are employed, the labour of reducing and correcting them by our own system would be not only enormous and of the driest and most repulsive kind, but requiring the greatest care and utmost accuracy. From these circumstances, few persons have the courage or patience to work out the problem, the result of which, when done, is often erroneous or doubtful, from the imperfect knowledge brought to bear upon it in the manipulation, and the liability to error involved. To expatiate more fully upon the peculiarities of these various eras would be to convert remarks, which are only intended to be introductory, into a treatise; we therefore content ourselves with calling the attention of the reader to the importance of understanding the difficulties which stand in the way of compiling an unimpeachable and perfectly homogeneous chronology.

We feel the more justified in adopting this course, from the patent fact, that, whilst oriental scholars are few they are the men who are the most interested in, and, at the same time, the most competent to effect the corrections or reductions they require ; we therefore return to the consideration of hints which may be useful to the readers of European and especially British historical literature.

We have already mentioned the English practice of commencing the year on the 25th of March, which was adopted by the Anglican Church in the twelfth century, by the civil community in the fourteenth, and continued in use until 1752 ; but we find that previous to the commencement of this period from the seventh century, the year was considered to commence on Christmas day ; and we are told that this mode of computation continued in vogue even to the thirteenth century, so that two certainly, and possibly three, orders of dates of events appear to have been in use in England at the same time—those of the legal and clerical authorities—being one and the same in referring occurrences to the ecclesiastical year, which, we are told by way of increasing confusion, appears to have commenced in some places upon the first sunday in Advent, the commonalty using another ; and the historical year commencing on the 1st of January.

In France the same confusion occurs. From the time of Charlemagne, and during the ninth century, the year commenced from Christmas day in the greater part of it, although it was in some instances reckoned from Easter day, or Easter eve, which subsequently became the more general practice, excepting in the provinces possessed by the English, Normandy, Poitou, Guienne, and Anjou, where Christmas day was considered the first of the legal year. Particular towns and provinces appear to have adopted, changed, or retained one or the other of these systems, at the caprice or convenience of their inhabitants, and it was only in 1563 that an edict of Charles IX., confirmed by the Parliament of Paris in 1567, ordained that the 1st of January thenceforward should be the commencement of the year. To this ordinance the church of Beauvais did not conform until 1580. In Germany and in most other countries equal want of uniformity prevailed,—the universities of Cologne, Treves, Strasburg, and numerous other places, having each its own style. In Denmark, the year was sometimes reckoned from the feast of St Tiburtius, the 11th or 12th of August.

In all the other European states similar changes were made at various periods, from March 25, or Easter day, as the case happened, to Christmas, then to the 1st of January. At Delft, Dort, and at Brabant in Holland, the year commenced on Good Friday until 1575.

Much trouble is sometimes caused by the occurrence of a birth or death or other event being recorded as taking place upon a Saint's day, Movable Feast, Vigil's, or at an interval of so many days from them. In reference to the ecclesiastical year, such dates are usual, and certain days of the civil year are sometimes distinguished only as those upon which "King Edward married Queen Margaret," or other memorable events took place. Certain discrepancies as regards particular days may sometimes be reconciled by referring to the practice of various peoples beginning their day at different hours, as at midnight, sunrise, or at mid-day.

A constant source of confusion arises in some of our most important records from the frequent use of regnal years only, without regard to any other chronological standard. The casual inquirer would probably require no surer basis for his calculation; nevertheless, he could possibly choose none more fallacious or perplexing. In addition to th[illegible]ections which we have already shown to be necessary in order to establish a reg[illegible]istent chronology, we have to ascertain in what manner the regnal years referred to [illegible]ted, and from what period they commence; as, in some instances, they are dated fro[illegible]s-sion de facto of the monarch to the throne, at others from his coronation, a[illegible] instances have been adduced, in which the broken part of the astronomical year re[illegible] after the succession de facto, has been reckoned as the first regnal year, the secon[illegible] mencing with the ordinary civil year.

This subject might be expanded to a much greater extent, but our object in treating it at all here is to show our readers the difficulty of verifying dates of comparatively very recent times and its causes. That discrepancies, and even glaring differences, such as cannot be accounted for by the aid of our suggestions, may arise, is not unlikely; we would request, however, that it should not be hastily assumed that they are the results of carelessness, but more probably of premeditation and intention. Another source of error has arisen from the fact of certain biographers having concluded from the title-page of a work that its author was living at the time of its publication: but whatever care may be taken with a dictionary of this character, there will probably be found some of those palpable errors which occasionally creep into even the most carefully revised works.

As a suitable addendum to a work of this nature, a Classed Index of the principal works on Biography published in Europe and America up to the present day has been carefully compiled, and arranged under three divisions, viz., General, or those which contain the accounts of individuals of all nations; National, or those which relate to the celebrities of particular counties; and Class, which treat only of the members of respective bodies or professions, as actors, painters, &c., and these are arranged or subdivided into nationalities. This Index, we trust, will contribute greatly to the value of the work.

To those who desire to pursue for themselves the vexed questions connected with doubtful dates, of which we have written in the foregoing pages, we would recommend the excellent French work, "L'Art de Vérifier les Dates," De Vaine's "Dictionnaire Raisonné de Diplomatique," the "Glossarium" of Ducange, the compendious "Chronology of History" by Sir Harris Nicolas, published by Messrs Longman in 1838, and "A Handy-Book of the Rules for Verifying Dates" by Mr Bond, of the Public Record Office, which appeared in 1866,—all of which will be found of the greatest assistance and value.
